

tion of Elam on the fact that his stock was troubling him, but he paid no attention to him.

Afternoon Session.
J. B. Mathews was called for the purpose of testifying in relation to certain correspondence between himself and Bodkin as to fencing the premises.

The prosecution objected to the introduction of the letters and was sustained by the Court. The witness understood the reason Bodkin wanted to get away was on account of trouble he had with Elam.

John B. Moran was called, and the names of two other witnesses mentioned by Mr. White, by whose testimony he wished to prove that Bodkin endeavored to procure employment away from home, and that certain reasons were given by him for wishing to go away.

The introduction of the testimony was objected to and objection sustained by the Court.

Mrs. Bodkin was recalled and said she had never used the water in the cistern after seeing the water in the bucket.

DR. R. C. KIRKPATRICK
testified as to the general health of the defendant. He suffers from asthma, and looks as well now as I have ever seen him. It was chronic asthma. There is a large bulging out of the ribs, which to him amounts to a deformity, caused by asthma—forced respiration. Compared with the average man, I wouldn't pass on him for a life insurance.

THE DEFENDANT RECALLED.

After testifying as to the acts of cruelty and abuse practised by Elam toward him, Bodkin said: I once started to haul my hay up. After I got three or four loads and as I went after another load I saw Elam coming. I started for the house. I whipped up the horses. He caught up with me. He commenced cursing me. He said he was a better man, physically and financially, and could whip me. He could afford to pay for it. He offered me $10 if I would stand up to him for two minutes. He then rode off. I went after another load and was unloading it when I saw him coming with a butcher-knife. I went in the house and remained there with my gun. I then hitched up my spring wagon and went after Mr. Roberts to help me. I was helped by Roberts and Gearhardt. I was afraid to go to milk my cow. I had my little boy go after her and I milked her at the back door. Elam soon showed up and made a reference to the Fourth of July, and connected it with St. Patrick's day in some way in ridicule. I am Irish. I got up next morning and went to see the District Attorney. I met Capt. Darcy and I had a conversation with him. I met a gentleman who I have since learned was George W. Knox. He was then Deputy District Attorney. I made a full and fair statement of the case, and that I was afraid of my life. I wanted to get Elam under bonds. He told me I didn't think I had proof enough to hold him. He told me to get a pistol and defend myself. He explained how and when I would be justified. I said: This is the law. If the law will not protect me and I will be obliged to protect myself. I know Mr. Krimm, Justice of Santa Ana. I tried to get out bonds for Elam to keep the peace. He gave me the same answer. I went also to J. C. Daly on the same errand, and I got no satisfaction there. I consulted with Messrs. Montgomery and Melrose. I got the same advice from all. This was in the month of July a year ago. After having made that trip I returned on the evening of the 5th of July in company with Ferguson. After supper we were sitting in the front part of the house. We heard two shots in quick succession from the direction of Elam's house. I took my gun and Mr. Ferguson had his pistol and we went out. I saw no one. Ferguson stayed eight or ten days. I didn't expect him to work, but he helped me. Mr. Ferguson wanted to go home when I got through work. I went away with him. I stayed over night at Norwalk. I had no other business except looking up a school. I went to Savannah and different places. I drove to San Bernardino. I took the list that I got and went looking for a school. I came home and stayed there a few days. I stayed in the house out of Elam's sight. I was told I would get a definite answer some time in July, so I told them I would wait for a definite answer at Pomona. I stayed until the following Tuesday. I went home and received a letter for a school. After I got the school I made arrangements with Matthews to fence jointly. Mr. Spate and his two men put it up. It was in good order when I left. The posts and fence were as good as they could be. The ground was very hard. I concluded then to peddle grapes at Long Beach. After I came back I took other loads to Pomona. While I was away the weeds grew so I started to cultivate. Mr. Elam went to Squires. I thought he had gone for the day. He came up at half-past 11 and commenced cursing me. He said my cow was in his vineyard. I told him his cow had been caught at Squires' at midnight. He stayed there a few minutes. He said: "G—d—n you, I will meet you in hell and settle this." He then rode away and I went to the house. I opened my school on the 15th. I returned in four weeks. I got home at midnight Saturday night. I found the fence I had up all torn down. It appeared as though it had been pulled up. I received information from my wife about the action of Elam. She told me substantially what she has testified to here. I offered a reward of $25 for the conviction of the party who tore the fence down. When I was at Cucamonga I spent several days trying to get a horse. I got a horse for $15, for the purpose of avoiding annoyance. I made arrangements with Mr. Cordell to rent my place. Negotiations were pending and almost completed November 1. I possibly knew more of Elam's strength than any man in California. On one occasion I went to the mountains with him for wood. He put some sticks on that wagon I wouldn't attempt to lift with another man. On another occasion I killed a hog. I went after him and he came. I forgot to leave the door open, so I told him to wait until I opened the door. I turned, after opening the door, and he was at my heels with the hog. It weighed about 250 pounds. It seemed a feather weight to him. I saw him on more than one occasion play with a rattlesnake. He had it at the house. He would play with it until it got mad, and then he would grab it. He would play with it with his bare feet. He had a young bull about a year old. He had caught the snake with his hands and brought it home. My children were afraid of him. His sisters were afraid of him. My children wouldn't go after water if he was around. They went the most difficult way to school to avoid him. I got a vacation for the purpose of renting my place. I found my wife was there. Mrs. Cordell came the next night. I came another way home to avoid meeting Elam. When I got home they were very much frightened at Elam, though while Mrs. Cordell was present he hadn't troubled them. I was suffering then from asthma. Any nervousness aggravates it. Coming home in the night time made it worse. I sat up in a chair. I inhaled burnt powder. On the morning of November 1st I was suffering from asthma. I hadn't eaten anything. About half-past eight I told the little boy and girl to take the cow out on the alfalfa patch. They started out. In a short time the little boy came into the room looking white as a sheet and terribly frightened and said that Mr. Elam was after them. I got up and went to the door and saw Mr. Elam coming towards me on the opposite side of the ditch. I walked over towards the ditch and got to where the chicken trough is located. Elam was on the opposite side of the ditch. He seemed to be very angry. I asked him what was the matter now. He said: "Your boy (or boys) have been saucing me." I told him I didn't allow my children to sauce anybody. "If they have sauced you I will punish them." He said: "By G—d, I will kick the G—d d—d s—s b—s." That excited me, as a matter of course. I said: "You will not, at least, while I'm around." He said: "G—d d—n you, I will do the same to you, you s—n of a b—h." He was then on the bank. He jumped and caught a gun tree with his left arm and swung to the board, saying at the same time: By G—d he would fix me now, or something to that effect. I knew I couldn't run. I drew my pistol and held it on him, and said to keep back. I cocked it, pointed it toward him, and said: "Keep back." All this time I was in motion. He gave one jump on to the middle of plank. To the best of my judgment he had got ten feet inside on the turn of the bank when I shot. He was four or five or six feet from me on a spring. As I shot he stopped like that (illustrating). I didn't really know whether he was hit or not, so I cocked the pistol again and held it on him. His position as he came towards me, was a little sideways. As he made the last spring, he put his hand this way (behind his back). I believed in my heart he would have killed me. I thought he had a weapon, and I knew if he didn't have one he could kill me anyhow. He was very much my physical superior. I would be no more in his hands than a child. I never addressed him until after I shot him, nor anybody else in my presence. Mrs. Bodkin never addressed him. She didn't approach him within fifty feet. I never told Alexander McDonald that I would shoot Elam before I would have trouble with him. Here the court took a recess until this morning at 10 o'clock.

THE GRAND JURY.

IT SUBMITS ITS REPORT TO JUDGE CHENEY.

Criticism of the City Jail, the Public Administrator, Santa Monica Officials, Our Police and the County Auditor, etc.

At 10:30 a.m. yesterday the Grand Jury, after a three weeks' session, presented its report in Judge Cheney's department of the Superior Court, as follows:

Hon. W. A. Cheney, Judge of the Superior Court of Los Angeles county, State of California.—The Grand Jury called by your order July 11, 1887, have carefully listened to your charge, and after due and careful deliberation and investigation and with malice toward none, have seen the path of plain duty before them, and entered upon it with deliberation, and pursued it without passion and without faltering. Foreseeing how much usefulness must be exposed they drew the lines with care and have endeavored not to overstep them in any case or under any provocation. Such of any man's acts concerning his fitness for public trust, are only alluded to in our report, which we hereby submit. Accountability in all things is the true basis on which to perform public service. We insist that the same degree of care is needed in the performance of public duties as in private. When public officers assume that there is no one in particular to whom they are responsible, that neglect and carelessness will be overlooked, and that if they commit no glaring criminal act they will not be called to account, the public service is said to be in danger. While, on the contrary, the knowledge that every civil officer, from the highest to the lowest, will be held to strictest responsibility for all his official acts, tends to secure the highest efficiency and faithfulness. There is much room for further improvement in this respect in the American civil service system, to effect which, however, further legislation is needed.

JAILS.—The County Jail was examined and found to be admirably fitted for the purpose for which it is intended, and except in one or two particulars, which we presume will be promptly remedied by the proper authorities, whose attention we called to the matter. We would call special attention to the point suggested by the accompanying report of the Jail Committee, that juvenile offenders should be separated from hardened criminals.

We call attention to the great number of prisoners charged with disturbance of the peace, which are plain drunks and vagrants, who ought to be set to work. It is alleged that they are booked for this offense in order that justices and constables may increase their bills against the county.

CITY JAIL.—This building is poorly constructed and is no credit to the city. One of the walls is cracked from top to bottom. The dark cells, for lack of ventilation and light, would better be a bastle of the eighteenth, than a prison in a human community in the nineteenth century.

COURTHOUSE.—In regard to the quality of the public records, to which your Honor has called our attention, we would earnestly urge that the cellar under the present courthouse be immediately made thoroughly fire-proof, as it can be at a moderate expense; that a broad stairway to it from the Recorder's or Clerk's offices be constructed, and that the records and titles of the county, in value almost incalculable, be placed therein and safely kept till they can be removed to the new Hall of Records, yet to be built. We would call attention to the law passed by the last Legislature, which provides for the appointment of a commissioner to see to the expenditure of moneys raised by public bonds.

PUBLIC HIGHWAYS.—We received several complaints and investigated them fully. We found that large sums of money are annually expended, that the Supervisors are the Road Commissioners, that roadmasters ought to report to them, etc. In fact, the laws governing roads seem to have been almost entirely ignored. The money in some road districts is often expended on one road, more especially on the one where the roadmaster generally travels, to the entire neglect of all other roads. Bridges have been neglected; that the city authorities have neglected the approach to the county road on Pico, Ninth and Temple streets.

COUNTY HOSPITAL.—We examined the building and grounds and found everything right, except in the old building, which we recommend should receive a coat of whitewash, as it will be a specific help for the extermination of vermin. The sewer facilities at the hospital are simply abominable. The cesspools are full and running over. We deem it prudent to recommend the removal of the kitchen from the present location, and put the same above ground. The charges made by some people have been carefully examined, but the parties are not indicted for want of corroborating testimony. We would suggest a few changes in the management.

First, the physician should be ex-officio superintendent and have control over subordinate, so that in case prescriptions are not duly filled, or his orders are disobeyed, he may discharge parties guilty of those faults at once, as human life should not be trifled with, even in charitable institutions. Second, the mode of leaving the female department at night in charge of a male attendant is, to say the least, offensive to decency. Third, there should be a reduction made in the quantity of wines and liquors used there. Certainly decency requires the exclusion of all drunken people from the hospital grounds. Fourth, the chairman of the Hospital Committee ought to visit the hospital at least once every week and converse with the patients, and inquire of them if any complaints are made, and remove the fear that exists among the inmates of retaliation for information given by them against the management.

COUNTY CLERK AND RECORDER.—We have examined the books of these officers and find them correct. We would hereby call the attention of the County Clerk to the necessity of having a book expressly for justices of the peace to show the amount of fines collected, and how much they have kept back for themselves and for constables as fees. The practice of the justices at present of entering on their dockets: "Judgment suspended," opens the door for great frauds to be practiced on the people of this State under color of law. Furthermore we call the attention of the Clerk to the law requiring the Public Administrator to settle with the County Clerk the first Monday of each month. We find that this law has been entirely disregarded.

DISTRICT ATTORNEY AND SHERIFF.—We have examined the books of these officers and find them correct, and this Grand Jury returns thanks to both of these officers for all assistance rendered this Grand Jury by prompt attendance and all accommodations to the committees in order to obtain the knowledge they required.

COUNTY TAX COLLECTOR.—We examined the books of that office, and found El Hammond short $12,441.93. A large portion of that sum could have been saved had the County Auditor complied with his duties. The present incumbent's office has also been examined and a slight error has been discovered, which was caused, perhaps, by his not being familiar with the points in law directing the management of his office.

COMMISSIONER'S OFFICE.—The books of that office are correct, except the omission of the material portion of the jury's verdict, to wit: each jury's verdict ought to be signed by the foreman of the jury, and so copied in his book.

PUBLIC ADMINISTRATION.—The books of that office are not fit to be reported on, and no deposit of any amount has been made in the County Treasurer's office, as required by law; and none was made until after the examination by this Grand Jury.

CRIME AT SANTA MONICA.—The affairs in Santa Monica, which have been so much complained of, we investigated, and found that the people of that municipality have been very unfortunate in their choice of town officers, especially the City Attorney. No harmony exists among the various officers, which is very detrimental to the tax-paying community and to the cause of good order.

POLICE DEPARTMENT.—We inquired into the cause of so many robberies that are committed in the county and city of Los Angeles, and why the robbers were so seldom caught. We find a most horrible state of affairs and no written law to punish some of the parties. "Fences," or harbors for thieves, exist who have full knowledge of these robberies and who protect the thieves. The keeper of one notorious den has twenty-two men as accomplices whom he protects, and when a robbery is committed and reported to the police, he is notified and reported.

THE CHIEF OF POLICE.—and, on some occasions, certain favored policemen or constables, repair at once to this den and invariably receive the assurance that the plunder has been seen, and the keeper of the den, or "fence," can be hired for a consideration, guaranteed by a written order from police headquarters, to see that a portion of the plunder is returned; and this business has been successfully carried on for nearly two years, and the money has been paid to the proprietor of the den by police officers, in some cases after they had possession of the stolen property. The Police Commissioners must have lax notions to permit the force under their control to be a party to this scandal for a long period of time.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS—FIRE.—The late fire near Mot's Hall, when a concert was held there, suggests to the jury the necessity of calling the attention of the city authorities to the importance of having doorways of public buildings open both inwardly and outwardly, and in no case inwardly only. Also the main aisles and passageways should be kept free, and the entrances and stairways should be at least eight feet wide, and should be placed at both ends of long buildings of two or more stories. Furthermore, we find Aurora street, near the Southern Pacific Railroad depot, dangerous to free use by the inhabitants, but on the assurance of Superintendent Hewitt that the company will abate the nuisance at once, no further action was taken; but we hold that the city authorities should insist on the immediate abatement of this nuisance, or else, in case of any serious accident, they will be liable before another Grand Jury to the charge of criminal neglect, and, possibly, responsible for damages for loss of life or property.

COUNTY AUDITOR.—The books of this office are kept in an improper manner. The lack of cooperation by Supervisors and County Auditor causes the public service great loss and confusion. For further details, reference is made to the report of this Grand Jury, we refer your Honor to reports of sub-committees, and which are hereby made a part of same. The question of $245,000 bonds voted by the city stands as follows: Only $190,000 were issued and disposed of.

We found eight indictments. All of which is respectfully submitted. (Signed) J. E. McCOMAS, Foreman. The supplemental reports filed include the experts', Committee on Public Roads, Courthouse, Jail, etc.; on County Auditor and County Hospital. The body proper of the report, in a concise shape, sets forth what the committee have incorporated in their investigations.

The jury's expert was James Mackenzie, and he examined, he states, books and papers of all officials of the county and finds them all correct. Concerning County Auditor Montano and his office, James Mackenzie reported to the Grand Jury as follows: "I would beg leave to report as to the County Auditor. He is the key-note to all the county's affairs, and that note is of the two years ago his books were in good shape; today they are in a miserable condition. Erasures of all kinds, moneys transferred from one account to another, which are wrong, and subsequently have been rectified. He handles no money, and as far as I am concerned, he is a book-keeper. He does not keep a good one."

His road-fund books are not correct, individually. In the aggregate they are, but yet such a state of affairs should not exist. If the County Auditor cannot be, as he should be, the accountant for the county, better have none, and make it a free race for all the state of affairs should not exist. He states that he has carefully footed up the various amounts collected by the different officials of the county. His signs, but I know this, but I know better, as the various clerical errors will show.

As I embodied in my report, as to the Tax Collector, if the County Auditor had done his duty the defalcation of El Hammond would have been found on January 31, 1887. Do not presume to dictate to you or to tell you of the acts required to be done by the County Auditor, but if he will only do his duty as required by law no official can default except as to the amount of one month's fees and receipts.

I trust that you may place the onus of these serious errors and corrections upon the facts that the business of the county is increasing, and that your County Auditor could not attend to it personally. Regarding Tax Collector Crawford, Mr. McKenney says: "Against all known authority and the political code, he received for tax deeds of 1886 the sum of $84, this amount being due June 14th, 1887, and July, 1887, respectively, namely: On June 14, 1887, $6, and on July 7, 1887, $18. This amount he turned over and deposited with the County Treasurer. I saw his receipt for the same. Only between the last Monday in November and the last Monday in December he cannot receive money. All redemptions and all tax titles have to pass through the County Auditor and Treasurer."

CHAUTAUQUANS.

ANOTHER GOOD DAY AT THE SEASIDE COLLEGE.

Large Attendance and Interesting Exercises—Lectures on "The Literature of India" and "The Mormon Problem"—Other Services.

The audience at the Chautauqua Assembly at Long Beach yesterday was still large and intent. The devotional conference took place at 8:30 a.m., and was followed by the class in calligraphy and physical training. At the Chautauqua Normal Union the attendance was large.

REV. CHERRINGTON'S LECTURE. At 10 a.m. Rev. F. B. Cherrington delivered an extremely interesting lecture, entitled "The Literature of India," a synopsis of which follows:

As with individuals so with nations; nothing so effectually roots out self-conceit and cultivates modesty as actual intercourse with the world, and actual acquisition of knowledge. This fact has been demonstrated on a broad scale within the past half-century by the better understanding of each other, arrived at by the occult and occult. For centuries each had looked upon the other with contempt, and the enormous development of commerce, the increased facilities of travel and the general activity of the past years have all combined to bring nations widely separated into comparatively close relations. One of the most manifest results of this more intimate knowledge of each other is a mutual recognition of the excellencies peculiar to each.

The Orient begins to see that the young occident is succeeding greatly in reducing to practical realities many of the fondest dreams of their own greatest thinkers, while the occident is coming to understand that its glories owe much to the long ages of past research of the Orient. Language, literature, science, art, social and philosophic and religious systems carried to such marvelous heights of development among Western nations could not possibly have become what they are had not the nations of the East grappled with all these great problems and wrestled with them like Titans.

Well is it that we who compose the occident are beginning to say that the light we now have is but the unfolding of that light started in the Orient.

We shall guard against falling into either of the extremes taken by some who, in magazines and papers, discuss this subject.

The laudation of those who, dazzled by brilliancies, forget the immense amount of foolish trash in their literature, and, on the other hand, the whole-sale condemnation of some disgusted by the fanatic foolishness, are unable to see the multitude of excellent things that abound. Prof. Max Müller said: "Scholars who spend their lives in editing the original texts or the interpretation of some of the sacred books of the East are inclined, after disinterring from a lot of rubbish some solitary fragments of pure gold, to exhibit these treasures only, and not display the refuse from which they came. No one who has collected and published extracts can possibly resist the temptation of showing what is beautiful, or, it may be, strange and rather exciting, and leave out the ordinary or tedious things connected therewith. We should face the problem in its full completeness, and it has been a puzzle to me how these sacred books can be by the side of so much fresh, simple and beautiful matter which is unmeaning, artificial and without sense, and even repellent. Not many have any idea what a vast thing Sanskrit literature is.

A survey of the Bible by the Indian Government brought to light the enormous number of 10,000 separate works. An essayist in a recent Edinburgh Review says: "We are thankful in knowing that a great deal of this is not likely to see any light in English." We say, with deference to the sarcastic essayist, we are thankful that competent scholars are laboring with wisely discriminating judgment to find out actually what this mass of literature contains, and the result of 3000 years of thinking by a noble race, and how much is worth bringing to light; and we shall await the results with hopefulness, believing that gems will be found in the rubbish heaps. The world is not overstocked with lofty thoughts or excellent expressions.

The labors of Sir John Muir, Sir William Jones, Prof. Max Müller and Mons. Williams and one Whitney, has given the English-reading public much of the most important classes. Thirty years ago Emerson aroused attention with reference to Hindoo philosophy. Edwin Arnold has recently awakened new interest with his poem "The Light of Asia." This poem owes not a little to the Christian setting given some of the brightest gems.

Buddha would be surprised at some instances of results where widely separated things are brought into close relations in his original teachings and, yet it is a charming book and it has attracted increased interest in India. I found a dozen words common to both Sanskrit and English. Our relation is not remote as we ordinarily think. As we come to understand them better we cease to regard them as "poor relations." They may be the black sheep of the family, but there are families in which the black sheep is superior to the others. Although India has so many languages, there is but one sacred one.

In Europe literature changes with languages, but the Sanskrit language unites all. Each dialect has its own literature, which is the best representative of its religion. To know any Latin nations we need not study the Latin language, when their own modern literature is at command. Hindoo dialects hold the same to the Sanskrit, but with Italian, French and Spanish it is different. It is impossible to understand Hindoo without studying Sanskrit. He went on and mentioned the different portions of Sanskrit literature, but said he could give but a brief outline of the literature. His lecture throughout was very interesting, and in conclusion he said no nation showed such marked individuality as does India.

At 11 a.m. Rev. P. H. Parker lectured to the theological class on "The Preacher in the Study," which was listened to with great interest.

From 4 till 5 p.m., the Language Schools and School of Instrumental Music and Oratory were held.

At 5, the C. L. S. C. Round Table was held, and the Rev. W. C. Stevens lectured on "The German University."

At 7:30, the Rev. Selah Brown spoke on "The Mormon Problem."

Tomorrow's programme is as follows:

OUR NEIGHBORS.

San Bernardino. July 27.—[Correspondence of THE TIMES.] W. F. Muth, formerly of Fresno, has assumed control of the Western Union telegraph office and is making a very favorable impression.

Dr. Bogart has sold his dental rooms and the good will of his many customers to Dr. W. J. Broadfoot, of Chicago. Dr. Broadfoot comes highly recommended.

On Friday a party of about twelve persons, together with as many more for other points, left for Escondido under direction of J. B. Sanchez, agent for the International Company, of Mexico.

The San Bernardino Times is getting up a large illustrated edition, descriptive of this particular part of the country.

At the meeting of the Land and Building Association last Monday night, a $1000 loan was offered for sale and was purchased by Prof. S. C. Lockard at 304 per cent. Good showing for one which has been running only six months.

On Tuesday, Mrs. Wozencraft, an old resident of this place met with a serious mishap. While descending a flight of stairs she lost her balance, and rolled from the first step to the bottom, breaking her arm in two places, dislocating her wrist, and cutting an ugly gash in her forehead. Her advanced age makes it rather bad, yet it is expected she will recover.

In Department Two of the Superior Court, on Thursday, Mrs. Tillie Shearer was granted a divorce on the grounds of desertion from Arthur D. Shearer.

The California Southern Railroad depot's addition is being pushed with all possible rapidity. Mr. Parker says he will add at once as many men as can work to advantage, and expects to have it entirely finished within six weeks' time.

OGLESBY.

THE REAL FACTS ABOUT THE TEXAS REFUGEE.

He Has Some Mighty Solemn Music to Play—Meant to Shoot the Officers—A Woman Who Would Fight—Back to Texas.

The facts in the case of Capt. T. L. Oglesby, ex-Sheriff of Maverick county, Texas, have never yet been made public. Some green papers have devoted themselves to honeying the prisoner, declaring that the charges of embezzlement, etc., against him were naught; that he was a good man sorely abused by political enemies in Texas; that he was really anxious to be taken back there and straighten matters up; would have gone of his own volition if he had not been arrested, and that he will soon be back here in the bosom of his friends, triumphantly vindicated, etc. This is all true. The Texas has been a place where a man of Oglesby didn't want to be caught, and that he had mighty good reasons for his coyness. Now that he is safely on his way to justice—beyond the reach of his political enemies, etc.—it may not be out of place to tell the facts in the case—and they furnish some very good reading.

In the first place, it has been perfectly evident that a case over which the Texas officials, from the Governor down, have been breaking their backs to get Oglesby, had something in it. The TIMES has already alluded to the dozens of telegrams and extensive correspondence which, passed relative to Oglesby during the last four or five weeks. As a matter of fact, Oglesby will have to face no less than nineteen indictments, on almost any of which, those well informed claim, he is mighty apt to go to the pen. It will take $1,500 good bail to get him out of the clutches of the law, and then there is the still more important Arrerues matter, for which bail has not been fixed. It is likely to be $10,000 or over. $20,000. The heirs of Arrerues have an approved claim for $100,000 against the Government for Oglesby's malfeasance. In surrendering an American citizen to be murdered in Mexico.

But the true story of Oglesby's arrest, till now untold—since the accounts published by contemporary newspapers have been so inaccurate—gives a very sensational interest in the matter. The TIMES has already noted how just as Deputy Sheriff Shad White arrived here from Texas to arrest Oglesby, that worthy skipped up into the San Gabriel cañon. His friends said that he had gone on a slinking hunt, and that he would be back in ten or fifteen days; that he would be glad to go to Texas and clear the matter up if he knew he was wanted. But Under-Sheriff Mitchell, who has had the case in charge from first to last, was not green enough to swallow all this. He learned that Oglesby had been kept posted by friends in Texas as to all that went on there; that he knew of the movement to secure him even before the Los Angeles authorities had heard of it. He had 100 Winchester cartridges here, and skipped for the mountains at once to avoid arrest; and that people in Monrovia were then keeping him informed by messenger of all that might concern him. Maj. Mitchell had sent out Deputy Sheriff Russell to capture Oglesby; but learning that Oglesby was a desperate man and well liked, he called Russell by telephone, not desiring to send him alone up a wild cañon after a desperate character.

Next evening Maj. Mitchell and Deputy Sheriff Shad White of Texas drove out to Pasadena. Next morning early they resumed their journey, being reinforced at Azusa by Deputy Sheriff Johnny Malone. Having made a few inquiries they started up the cañon on horseback, armed with rifles and revolvers, leading a pack-horse and equipped with ten days' rations. They passed the night at Potter's, and very early in the morning proceeded up the cañon. In a short time they suddenly and unexpectedly rode almost on top of five or six men camped among the rocks and eating their breakfast. Shad White was riding the pack-horse, and Mitchell last. They had fairly passed the party when White turned and said in a low tone to Mitchell: "That's our man—that big fellow." Mitchell jumped from his seat, walked to Oglesby, who was sitting and smoking, and said: "Hello, Cap! I have a warrant for you." Oglesby rose, while Mitchell kept his hand on the butt of his six-shooter and read the warrant. "This is G—d—d—d tough," said he. "If I had seen you a minute quicker and got my rifle, I'd have worried you." "Oh, no, you wouldn't," replied Mitchell, "I know every foot of these mountains."

Oglesby then asked Mitchell to walk down to the brook with him, as he desired a little private conversation. Mitchell went, and once saw the meaning of the move. Oglesby was maneuvering to get his six-shooter, which lay on his blanket there. Mitchell blocked this game, however, and soon the captors started down the cañon, taking Oglesby on the pack animal and leaving the provisions to his companions. Stopping at Monrovia to let Oglesby change his clothes, they arrived in this city in the evening, supped at Dot's and proceeded to the jail, where Oglesby's wife was waiting. Her eyes were like fire, and when they all got into the jail office she opened out. "Capt. Oglesby," said she, "you were armed. Why didn't you shoot? I would rather see you dead at my feet than here under arrest."

The big prisoner had a wholesome awe of her. "I would have shot, my dear, if I had had half a chance," said he. "But I had just cleaned my rifle, and it was leaning up against a tree ten steps away. My pocket was full of cartridges, and if I had seen these men a second sooner I'd have shot. But I had no chance. They were right on me before I knew it. I had no shot at all." Mrs. Oglesby reiterated her demand to know why he had not fought. "They were right on me before I knew it," she said, with an ominous flash of her eye. She would not be pacified till Maj. Mitchell explained that her husband had no show in the world to make his escape.

A great deal of twaddle has been disseminated about Oglesby's anxiety to get back to Texas to straighten the matter up. He told some glib reporter a few days ago that he had it all fixed; the District Attorney, the Judge, and his father-in-law, Col. Bradley, are in with him at the district jail. Shad White, the cool, quiet, courageous deputy sheriff who came here for Oglesby, says this is all rot. The Judge and District Attorney aren't in that business, and Bradley hasn't a bean. Oglesby has confessed to White and Maj. Mitchell that it was all up with him now.

Day before yesterday Shad White went up to the jail and had a little talk with Oglesby. Said he: "Cap, the papers for you have come, and you'll start tomorrow. You know I like you personally, but I have my duty to do, and I'm going to take you through there. There mustn't be any monkey business. Your wife has your gun and one of her own. She must give both to me before we start. She isn't going to pass you a gun if I know it. Furthermore, I shall turn you and take you 'emigrant.' She can ride in the Pullman and come in and see you as much as she likes—but mind, no funny business."

Oglesby looked like a steer at the iron, and finally compromised. He pays the expenses of Johnny Malone to go along too, and the two men guard him to the city tomorrow. If he shows any signs of a break, however, they will iron him. The prisoner, his wife, and his guards started for Texas yesterday morning. Oglesby will undoubtedly escape if he gets a chance, and the telegraph will be anxiously watched until it is learned that he is safely jailed in Texas.

THE SAN FRANCISCO EXAMINER'S TRIBUTE TO THIS CITY.

At Last a San Francisco Paper is Able to See the Southern Boom in its True Light—The Cause Divined.

The San Francisco Examiner says: Sixty thousand visitors to Los Angeles are already booked by the overland railroad companies for the coming winter. The eye of the country is turned toward the metropolis of Southern California. People living in Europe and the East who have means to travel want to see the fascinating things which they have read about in newspapers and magazines. They come and behold them, and resolve to stay. The reality proves more attractive than the advertisement.

It is a wonderful region. The magnolias, the palms, the orange and lemon trees in the gardens lend warmth which people from colder climes appreciate instantly.

But natural features do not constitute all the charms of Los Angeles. The residents have none of the languor which is usually characteristic of the tropics. It is the most energetic community in the State today. The citizens, in their enthusiasm for everything savored of progress, are in a condition little short of intoxication.

No wonder, either. In 1880 the city of Los Angeles had, according to the Federal census, a population of but 11,311. In July, 1887, seven years later, the estimates place the population at between 60,000 and 65,000. The county in 1880 had only 32,379 inhabitants. Now the township of Los Angeles has above 100,000. It is one of the most notable instances of swift growth which the history of the Union affords. Minneapolis and Kansas City can scarcely parallel it.

How is this boom to be accounted for? It cannot be set down to sheer trumpeting; for the people who come to see what is offered belong to a class who are able to go away again if disappointed. It is hardly accurate to call the movement a boom. It is a development deserved and substantial. The settlers in Los Angeles are different from the run of immigrants. They come, as a rule, with plenty of money, and put up villas instead of shanties. They go in for landscape gardening rather than for agriculture. All around the town are to be seen evidences of what wealth and taste may do in a new country.

The spirit of the locality is strange, puzzling, and finally inspiring to the San Franciscan who goes there. He finds himself in contact with the brisk Eastern business man. There is cheerfulness, bustle, a universal desire to make the new-comer feel at home, and to improve things. Everybody has public spirit. Everybody is proud of Los Angeles, and solicitors for its future. It is a queer experience for the San Franciscan.

Several general causes are behind the Los Angeles boom. One—and it is a very important cause—is railroad competition. The Santa Fe Company's liberal and intelligent land policy has had great effect. Instead of holding large tracts of land and selling only at the highest market price, it has broken up half of its belongings into small lots and invited buyers to come and purchase. Population has, in this way, been drawn. And landowners throughout the section, seeing the results, have been moved to follow suit.

Los Angeles—the entire southern country, indeed—offers an object lesson of the most vividly instructive kind to the whole North, and particularly to San Francisco. The men of this town who wish for a new order of things could not direct their energy in a better way than to raise a fund to defray the expenses of a series of excursions to Los Angeles. Our old-timers, our sold citizens who give the tone to our business life, should be taken down to the new California and given personal knowledge of it. Then they would know what the phrase "ahead" means, and realize that fresh blood is pouring into the State to revolutionize it.

CHRISTINE NILSSON.

Sketch of her Home Life By Olive Logan.

The home of Christine Nilsson, in Kensington court, is one of the most luxurious bonbonniers in London. It may really be looked upon as her bower, for previously she occupied a house in Belgrave, which, though very fine and expensive, was not half so charming as the beautiful nest in which the nightingale now reposes. I made one of the diva's company on her last reception, and passed an hour or two of that unalloyed enjoyment which it is occasionally given us mortals to experience. The world-renowned songstress received me with engaging and hospitable warmth at the door, and in a drawing room, an apartment crowded with artistic furniture, richly carved and gilded, embroidered draperies, and an almost indescribable quantity of rare bibelots. A gilded cabinet bearing the monogram is quite filled with exquisite ancient fans, several of which are historic, having belonged to queens and princesses; a Chickering concert grand piano is partially covered with an unusually fine China cruet set, embroidered in colors, trimmed with a multi-colored fringe, and looped up here and there with rare old silver clasps. Sculptured ivory, burnished enamels, an ancient ornate clock with its face set round with costly crystals which sparkle almost like diamonds, a marble bust of the diva standing on a bulb table under the graceful foliage of a palm, and at least a score of photographs of crowned heads, whose sovereign fingers have offered these tributes, with their autographs, to Christine Nilsson, are a few of the many interesting objects upon which the charmed eye of the visitor falls. The lovely Queen of Merceus, of Spain, the Empresses of Russia and Austria, the Queens of Greece, Sweden and Norway, the Princess of Wales, the Duchess of Edinburgh, and many other great ladies have given their photographs of admiration to the celebrated singer. Right well and happy does the celebrated songstress look today in her dark blue gown of satin-faced surah, made without train, high neck, and with the elbow sleeves which show to such advantage the white and shapely arms. A touch of pink ribbons and a voluminous cascade of fine old point lace form an admirable background for the wonderful parure of sapphires and diamonds with which her ears, neck, fingers and arms are adorned. She looks handsomer now than she did a score of years ago when Cavanel painted that exquisite full-length of her as "Opheia," which hangs yonder. "It was young and poor then," she says, stroking her now plump cheeks, and by the use of "thin," howing how great an influence her American connection has had in forming her English speech; for in England "poor" and "lean" are not considered identical in meaning. With a hearty admiration that has truth ringing in every syllable, Christine speaks of her fondness for America and her gratification in the knowledge that she is liked there. She belongs to the Scandinavian race, a people who, more perhaps than any other, assimilate well with our native-born population; and one can quite easily believe that if she were but one of the many simple Swedish women who inhabit America, instead of being one of the greatest prima donnas that ever lived, she would like, even almost as much as now she does, the free air and the socially noble institutions of the United States.

The fair Christine, now the Countess Casa de Miranda, and I were interested in the personality of her happy spouse. The count is a slender man, of middle age, of about Nilsson's own height, with dark complexion, and eyes which require a circular, rimless glass stuck in one of them only. Immeasurably proud, and naturally so, the gentleman seems to be of his renowned and fascinating wife; and the pleasant little daughter, who has brought them together, flits from one parent to the other as joyous as a bird in the sunshine. She is quite Spanish in her coloring, and though she has fine black eyes, would scarcely be called a beauty. With the joy of happy motherhood and wifehood gleaming brightly from her sapphire eyes, Nilsson herself is a beauty; and her voice is the angel's prayer that it ever was. Am I not to be envied? I who write to you, sitting on a gold divan, by Nilsson's side as she sings Schubert's "Serenade." Netty Carpenter accompanying her on the violin and Ganz at the piano! I will hear no lesser vocalizing after that exquisite dream of melody, and so depart down the gobelins tapestried oak staircase, past the morning room in claret velvet, the dining-room in Spanish leather, the quaint hall with stained glass windows, in which stand three men servants in livery, and then out into the prosaic world of spoken speech, the Queen's highways of Piccadilly, Bond street and the Strand.

TAKEN FROM "LIFE."

In a bad box—Canned salmon. Emperor William has resorted to Ems, but it is not stated how many he can set up in an hour.

A man can really pay more attention to a woman by looking at her with one eye than he can with both eyes.

Good-by, McGlynn! Meet you—(scuse us, your Holiness). Forget, McGlynn. Have made different arrangements. Can't meet you hereafter.

The attention of the world has lately been called to the existence of a talking canary, which was trained by a woman. There's nothing like the force of example.

King Solomon was over one hundred years old when he married, and although he dressed nicely he was a very plain man. Most of his wives married him for money.

If the shad which have nearly abandoned the Connecticut river had taken the precaution of carrying their bones with them, our grief at their departure would not be without consolation.

In his Atlantic ode, "My Country," George E. Woodberry describes justice as "the third great base" on which our welfare is founded. It is high time that our national game should be recognized in patriotic poetry.

"What is this?" thundered the chairman; "here is a newspaper report of an anarchist washed ashore." Who has broken the rules of this order? "He was dead, said a member rising, "or he would never have submitted."

"You mustn't call me a salesperson," said a pretty shop-girl, bridling, to a rather elderly co-worker. "Then you shouldn't have told Mr. Crash that it was very appropriate putting me at the remnant counter," was the indignant reply.

"What's the matter, Bub?" inquired a Philadelphia citizen of a little boy who was crying. "My k-kite won't fly," sobbed the lad. "Well, no wonder," said the gentleman examining it, "it is made of the editorial page of the Ledger."

He: Your friend, Miss Shawsgarden, of St. Louis, seems to be a very refined young lady, Miss Breezy. Miss Breezy, (of Chicago): Yes, Clara is unquestionably genteel in most respects, and in personal appearance almost distinguished, but it would pain you to see her eat asparagus.

"What brought you to this place, my friend?" inquired a visitor at the penitentiary of a convict. "A mere matter of opinion got me here, sir." "Impossible!"

"No, sir. I expressed the opinion that I was innocent, and the jury expressed the opinion that I wasn't. It's a cold world, sir."

Kerrigan (in the attic): Pifwhat happened me razor, Julie? It's skinnin' me, it is! "Mrs. Kerrigan (below): Shure, darlint, Rosie wuz after trimmin' th' goat's hoofs a little. Sorra th' bit she cud climb ter Mrs. Casey's tomato vines nixt dure, widout th' Kerrigan. All right, acushla! PRESENCE OF MIND.

Editor: What was that awful crash in the composing room now?

Foreman: Sure, all our foreign news has fallen into "it."

Editor: Pick it up and head it "List of Members of the New Hungarian Parliament."

By a resolution passed by the board of directors, a street railway is to be commenced on Olive avenue, and completed as soon as possible; also, ten more buildings, to be commenced and completed as soon as men and material can be provided—the demand for buildings is far in excess of the supply.
